

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A contact pin comprises a plunger contacting an electric part, a bottom contact portion electrically connected to a printed circuit board, and a spring urging the plunger and the bottom contact portion so as to separate from each other, in which at least one of the plunger and the bottom contact portion is formed by press-working a plate member. The bottom contact portion is provided with a connection portion to which the plunger is connected.